Girls of the Hamlet Club by Elsie J. Oxenham

How the Hamlet Club began, with new girl Cicely seeing that Miss Macy's school was divided into warring factions of town girls and hamlet girls. It's a wonderful introduction to the Abbey series, as Cicely strides over the hills befriending the hamlet girls and showing them the meaning of the motto "To be or not to be".

The Hamlet Club, formed in the first book in the series, Girls of the Hamlet Club, was set up to combat snobbery in the school. Underlying the club's overt activities of folk-dancing and rambles was its motto 'To be or not to be', and its badge, the Whiteleaf Cross. These were both symbols of deeper meanings.

The Girls of the Hamlet Club - £15 (plus P&P for non-members) The 'real' first title in the Abbey Series which tells how Cicely comes to form the Hamlet Club, why they took up Folk Dancing, and the reason behind the 'Saints' and the 'Sinners'.

Publications - The Elsie J Oxenham Society

The first title, Girls of the Hamlet Club set the scene for the school aspects of the series, but it is the second title, The Abbey Girls, that introduces The Abbey - almost a character within the series in its own right - a romantic ruin that inspires love for it as a quiet, peaceful place, and creates the wish to behave in the public-spirited tradition of the early Cistercian monks.

Abbey Series - Wikipedia

The first title, The Girls of the Hamlet Club was published in 1914. It introduces Cicely Hobart who attends Miss Macey's school in Wycombe. There she starts the Hamlet Club for scholarship girls who can't afford to join other school clubs. The members learn Morris and Country Dancing and begin a May Queen ceremony.

Drama Club is a group of fighters similar to Black Delmo who appear in AIKa Zero with little bearing on the central plot. They work under the White Knights. Under the orders of the student council, they try to recruit Aika and Karen. They fight using the prop swords from the play they are rehearsing. They are just a regular group of adolescent girls who study at the Academy and take part in ...
